

Text Messaging & Electronic Communication Consent

If you choose to communicate outside of Secure Messaging through Simple Practice via text messaging, it is important to understand that these methods may not be fully secure or encrypted. While reasonable care is taken to protect your privacy, confidentiality cannot be guaranteed when using electronic communication outside of the secure client portal.

Text messaging is generally best used for scheduling, cancellations, and logistical communication. Clients may choose to communicate about more personal or clinical matters through these methods at their own discretion, with the understanding that electronic communication outside of the secure client portal may not be fully secure.

By signing below, you acknowledge and accept the potential privacy risks associated with electronic communication and consent to receive text messages and other electronic communication from the practice.
